Select the image file you want to work on from the computer. Click the New Document button on the top of the screen. You will be able to see the image file's size and image quality in the New Document window in the Taskbar (Figure 1). Figure 1. Drawing Demo On a very high level, Demos are the application of an API by an application. You would like to present a live demo of what you are creating? Are you interested in checking out the parts of the API that you can use? Would you like to discover how the JavaScript is rendered by the browser? Demos aren't always pretty, but they go into great detail. If you are looking at a demo, there will be the API, rendered by the browser, in a form you understand. The "name" of the API being used might be "HTML5", "WebGL", "JSON", "Node.js", "crypto" or any of the other hundreds of supported APIs. The goal of the demo will be to demystify that API. References This is a place to link to other live demos that were built to demonstrate the API. If you have a story about a community member that is doing something extraordinary, you might want to nominate them for a Guinness World Record. The Guinness World Records community has a great way to discover where they live, learn about special achievements, personal stories and more. All you need to do is to nominate a local person for their special achievement by going to the website and filling in your details. Once your nomination has been recorded, the Guinness Book of Records will contact you to tell you of their success. The Guinness World Records have approached me to tell me that I am the current holder of the World's Oldest Person title. My doctors say I am in excellent health, and I have made it over 100 years! I spent the whole of World War II as a P.O.W. and was released from the slave labour camp in India on 11th January 1946. I am very thankful to the British for giving me a new life, and I love the country in which I live, and which is my second home. This website uses cookies.
