--> The VDA van is original to the game and is a high quality, accurately modelled (including some elements not found on the real vans) and featuring precisely placed hardware. --> The VDA van has inside, outside and top views --> Over 40 different versions of the VDA van are included, ranging from standard to heavily weathered (plus an extra that is hidden) --> All VDA Van versions are accurately modelled and have correct horn, mirrors, light options and side profiles. --> VDA Van features authentic sounds from the 1980's --> All version have couplings, doors, lockers and cattle steps --> VDA Vans have been randomly generated so the law of averages would ensure some are on blue ballast and some on grey, and the deeper into the pack you go the more variations you find. --> VDA Van weathered versions have been hand painted by the team

About This Content In the mid 1980s, British Rail introduced the VDA Van (Voluntarily Ditched & Abandoned Van) based on the standard

Edwardian era BRITISH ARCHIVE Van. The VDA Van was a regular freight service vehicle, typically used for the carriage of ballast and sand. The VDA Van was an ideal freight vehicle, requiring very little maintenance and with a long life of around 40 years. The main problem the VDA Van had was that it was extremely unpopular and to many one of the more daunting parts of rail maintenance. The 1980s saw a decline in all forms of rail maintenance, brought about in large part by increasing pressure from unions to maintain “my” railroad, meaning the majority of the crew were never stationed on that particular train, and the wrong equipment was deployed by the crew. Due to the decline of freight traffic, the VDA Van was short of motive power in the 1980s and in some cases, the drivers and navvies were known to knock off from duty to walk home. The lack of training for the drivers meant that maintaining the VDA Van was very easy and as such, the VDA Van was very easy to vandalise and vandalised with regularity. While the VDA Van was considered a failure, in some instances on the Network South East as it was seen as a novelty in the declining freight movement the VDA Van actually increased the progress of rail maintenance.
